

Council refuses Daily budget

by Malcolm Guy

The judicial committee's recent judgement on the binding power of Open Meetings was tested on the Daily budget at last night's Council meeting.

Linda Feldman, graduate studies and research representative, presented a motion calling for Council to approve without delay the Daily budget ratified by last November's Open Meeting. It was defeated, 8 to 7.

The original subsidy for $44,000 was defeated by Council last fall and the Daily is now operating under an amended subsidy of about $28,000, passed by Council on October 31.

Feldman said that, according to the judicial committee decision, Open Meetings have the power to grant funds. "The Daily should now receive its full budget to allow it to continue operations," said Feldman.

Michael Johnson, arts and science representative, said that the judicial committee decision clearly gives open meetings the power to grant funds in any area unless the constitution gives council jurisdiction. "For Council to delay this motion is ridiculous. The money has already been granted," said Johnson.

Vice-President Earle Taylor disagreed. He claimed that, "The judicial committee's judgement keeps the management and control of the Daily under the jurisdiction of Council."

"There seems to have been considerable mystification of the relevant issues," said Feldman. "Council must abide by the decision of the judicial committee."

Joan Mandell, editor of the Daily, agreed that the debate over the interpretations of the judicial committee decision was clouding the real issues. She said, "the students at the Open Meeting voted the Daily the full budget. Without the extra money, we will not be able to continue publishing until the end of the year."

Later in the evening, a motion concerning Old McGill '73 (the yearbook) was presented by Earle Taylor. The yearbook was being held back by the printers at the request of the council executive.

Taylor's motion stated that Old McGill '73 should be sent back to the printers with parts to be reprinted.

Paul Drager also expressed disapproval of the yearbook. "This book is in completely bad taste, the immaturity that passes for social conscience is out of place in a book for graduating students," said Drager.

The book, edited by Nigel Gibson, contains a series of photographs of cattle progressing through a slaughterhouse, between the pages of portraits in the graduating students' section.

Taylor said that there was a possibility of losing up to $17,000 on the book with the photographs included. But if the book was reprinted with deletions only $14,000 would be lost," he said.

Gaston Jorre, law representative, pointed out that a $17,000 loss would only occur if advertisers and subscribers were offended and pulled out their financial support.

"This book shows a great deal of originality," said Linda Feldman. She explained that when Nigel Gibson was chosen editor, the council was aware of his political views. She stated that this motion was a form of outright censorship.

"The slaughterhouse bit is quite indicative of the plight graduating students are in," said Campbell

Hendery, arts and science representative.

Paul Drager said that the administration was offended by the contents of the book, and had offered to pay the cost of reprinting.

Joan Mandell questioned the fact that the administration offered to pay for reprinting before Council decided whether it wanted the book reprinted.

The motion was defeated, 7 to 5, and Old McGill '73 will soon be released.

Council also defeated a resolution presented by Gaston Jorre to rescind the $3 dinner allowance councillors receive after every meeting. Most of the councillors stated that they needed the money for food and transportation to Council meetings. Campbell Hendery exclaimed, "After these meetings the only thing I use my allowance for is a good double scotch!"

VOL. 63 NO. 71 THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 7, 1974 3 CENTS

Statement by the editor of Old McGill

Last night, the Students' Council spent approximately two hours debating a motion by the executive to prevent the release of the university annual I edited last year.

I was present at the meeting, but I wasn't asked to speak. So I didn't. Which is just as well, since I probably wouldn't have known what to say — or where to begin.

Familiar, as I am, with the neanderthal logic of the Executive, their spurious comments and clumsy attempts at slander couldn't have bothered me less.

Two matters, however, cannot be dismissed that lightly.

The first is the disgustingly eager fashion in which the administration sought to interfere in the affairs of students, by offering to subsidize the reprinting of the book. That they were encouraged, invited even, to do this by those who presume to call themselves "student representatives" is a sad reflection on the state of the Students' Society.

The second thing that disturbed me was that this whole absurd

Nuclear family defended by Bettelheim

by Darryl Benjamin

"There have been radical changes in the structure of families in the last few generations," said Dr. Bruno Bettelheim last night to a capacity audience in Leacock 132.

Bettelheim is a noted child psychologist from the University of Chicago. He is also a member of the American Psychology Association and the Chicago Psychoanalytic Society. He has published many books, the latest called "Children of the Dream."

Making frequent comparisons between the past and the present, Bettelheim emphasized the role of children in the family structure. "The attitude in the past was such that when the children went wrong they were the ones blamed, and their parents were given sympathy. Today, the children are given sympathy and the parents are blamed."

He went on to say that today most children are brought up with anxieties caused by parental disapproval; hence, the child feels something is wrong with him or her. "Nowadays the child doesn't know what to do to become a good child. It has become extremely complex to be a good child," he said.

According to Bettelheim, the child in the past was largely regarded as "an economic necessity." The father was skilled in one craft and earned his child's admiration. The child went on to learn the father's profession. This admiration, Bettelheim said, was "a very necessary narcissistic satisfaction that makes both the child and the parents feel good about themselves."

The situation today, however, is quite different. "Today the child is much too dependent on his parents." In many cases, Bettelheim admitted finding that "(The child's) expectations to do better than his parents gave him such a hopeless feeling of defeat that he doesn't even try."

Bettelheim said that for a family to reach harmony with itself, it must stay together. "A family becomes a family by mutual support."

In order for a child to grow up to be mentally healthy he must live in an environment of social solidarity. Achieving this social solidarity is not always easy. The parents must have respect for the child as well as the child respect for the parents. "What must be stressed in the family structure is the feeling of belonging," he said.

Citing specific difficulties in modern family life, Bettelheim said that children mature at an earlier age now than in the past, causing many problems. "Children mature earlier. They are sexually mature much earlier. This taxes the youngsters' ability—they are at the height of physical strength yet still economically and morally bound to their parents—it just doesn't fit," he concluded.

Morgentaler speaks at sex symposium

by Allison Rowley

Dr. Henry Morgentaler, speaking at yesterday's session of the Symposium on Sexuality, stated that sexuality should not only be for procreation, but also for the expression of "important human needs".

The topic of discussion was "Accidents of Sexuality".

The panelists included Morgentaler, recently acquitted of a charge of performing illegal abortions, Roger Balk, an Anglican chaplain and co-ordinator of the chaplaincy service at McGill, Donna Cherniak, editor of the Birth Control Handbook and medical student and Dr. Robert Aikman, an obstetrician and gynecologist.

Morgentaler criticized the Catholic Church for its attitude towards sex as necessary only for procreations, stating that this traditional stance evolved from a "mistranslation of five lines of the Bible."

Morgentaler also said that since unwanted pregnancies will occur, it is "sane and normal" for abortions to be performed under medical circumstances. He said that "it is the right of any woman to determine whether or not to terminate her pregnancy", and that the attitude of the Catholic Church, as well as the existence of the abortion laws, have caused much "suffering, death and injury" to women who are forced to have abortions illegally.

Morgentaler also accused the Liberal government of "deceit, lies, hypocrisy, and indifference to the suffering of women."

Balk said Christianity itself is based on an "accident" of sexuality: the virgin birth of Christ. He stated that the idea of the virgin birth was used to exempt Christ from the sin of sexuality. Balk remarked that the church has overemphasized this doctrine of sexuality as man's evil nature, to the extent of forgetting that man "was created in God's image and that all — even sexuality — is good."

He also stated that we are "in great danger of turning sexuality into a technology", explaining that the joy of sex is its irrationality and surprise.

Donna Cherniak spoke on venereal disease. She stressed that, since there are no effective prevention methods, we must concentrate on the detection of VD and on changing our attitudes towards it.

Cherniak argued that the medical profession should become more open towards the problems of sexuality and that sexual partners should take the responsibility of informing each other if one has VD.

Dr. Robert Aikman felt that it was important for the doctor to "come to grips with his own sexuality". He added that one of the drawbacks of abortions is that sterile couples will have less chance of adopting children, because of the decreased number of unwanted children.

Morgentaler disagreed on the grounds that there are still many children up for adoption, here and in under-developed countries.

Representative of SWAPO to speak

by David Stryker

In reaction to the occupation of Namibia by South African troops, the South Africa People's Organization (SWAPO) has for seven years been waging a multifold campaign aimed at Namibian independence.

The occupation of Namibia has led to the implementation of South Africa's apartheid (racial segregation) policy there, by force of arms, and SWAPO charges that the American, Canadian, and multi-national corporations have taken advantage of this situation to extract huge profits at the expense of the Namibians.

SWAPO is presently fighting this situation on several fronts. It has encouraged strikes by workers, especially miners, who have been supported by demonstrations and boycotts organized by Namibian students.

SWAPO is waging a military campaign against the occupying troops while its representatives abroad are attempting to raise funds and gain support for the organization.

Finally, SWAPO is planning to build a health and education centre, designed to give 5,000 Namibian refugees the means for self-support.

Mishake Muyongo, the vice-president of SWAPO and Hugh Nangle, from the Gazette, will be speaking about the situation in Namibia, in Leacock room 219, today at 8 p.m. The event is being sponsored by the McGill Debating Union, with the Afro-Asian Latin American Peoples' Solidarity Committee. All will be welcome.

episode might serve to discourage students on this campus from developing to the fullest their powers of creative imagination. McGill being McGill; that's the last thing this place needs.

The point of the "controversial" slaughterhouse section was not, despite what Paul Drager might believe, "intended to insult the graduates of McGill."

It was merely an overly cynical and certainly inadequate indictment of a straitjacketed, repressive, educational process.

The analogy, as most people have gathered, is not completely exact.

None of the cows herded through a slaughterhouse manages to escape unscathed.

A growing number of students, however, are struggling and managing to overcome the narrow boundaries of their bourgeois education.

Paul Drager, Earle Taylor, and others of their shabby company are not, it would appear, among those so favoured.

With their narrowmindedness, eclipsed imaginations, and shameful subservience to the administration, they have made my point far better than I could ever hope to do.

*Canine care approvedA SHOT OF WRY

Dog's life at McGill to begin

by Nigel Gibson

The Board of Governors of McGill University has approved administration plans to establish a Canine Day Care Centre in the duly renovated Morrice Hall.

The Centre, which, when completed, will have the capacity to accommodate approximately 160 dogs of both sexes, is to be funded for the most part with the money allocated to the administration, and earmarked for student services, by the Quebec government.

McGill News

The McGill administration has, it is clear, gone out on a limb to champion the cause of man's best friend — the common dog. (Houndus mundanis).

The reasons underlying this dramatic change in direction, were not however immediately obvious. At first, most administration watchers, unemployed Kremlinologists, followers of The Perfect Master and other undesirables, were inclined to dismiss the move as a last ditch attempt by McGill to bolster its sagging ratings in the tightly competitive youth market.

The recent disclosures concerning the extent of the university's involvement with the Pentagon war machine have sent McGill's stocks plummeting to an all-time low. The administration is known to be desperately seeking to recoup its losses, in view of its upcoming high-pitch recruitment campaign, aimed at orphanages across Canada, where the issue of war research is known to be regarded with particular sensitivity.

These allegations however, were immediately and most vehemently denied by the Dean of Graduate Studies and Research, Walter Hirschfeld.

The ultra-conservative Hirschfeld, referred to affectionately by his Senate colleagues as "the chubby corporal" said that he was "terminally tired of having something as honourable as martial research take the blame for everything that happens at this university — just because an obnoxious handful of vociferous students and faculty members appear to have developed some obviously perverted mental block against the field in question."

"Personally," said Hirschfeld, "I don't understand what all the fuss is about."

"As a scientist," he continued, "I don't see anything implicitly wrong with exploring the fascinating applications of something like napalm, for example."

"In fact," continued the dean, "I understand that the hot jello makes a great insecticide. The Rhodesians and the Portuguese have achieved some very significant results with it in their thankless battle against swarms of giant locusts and other equally stubborn African pests."

As for the reasons for the surprise decision to establish the Canine Day Care Centre they were left for Principal Robert Bell to disclose, at an intimate press conference/tequila party, held last Monday night, in the Principal's spacious, imitation oak panelled office.

It was in these relaxed surroundings that Bell revealed for the first time, that far from engaging in any spontaneous action, the administration had actually acted to head off what could have developed into a "potentially extremely messy struggle."

This unpublicized struggle for dog-care, according to the Principal, was spearheaded by a committee of "very determined ladies from our accounting department, aided and abetted by a handful of outside agitators from the Faculty of Divinity."

It was these "outside agitators" from the Faculty of Divinity who were, according to Bell, primarily responsible for bringing the university authorities to their knees, by threatening to hold a "shit-in" in the administration building if their demands continued to fall on deaf ears.

"That was the last straw," sighed the Principal, chewing morosely on a slice of lemon. "With all the shit the Daily throws at us, week after week, day after day, we couldn't take anymore if we wanted to."

"Besides, those Divinity people are used to flinging the bovine variety around with casual abandon, and as Oscar Wilde was fond of saying: 'you can't be too careful about choosing your enemies.'

"Anyway," continued the Principal, downing his third tequila, and looking all the better for it, "James McGill would have approved, and that's the main thing."

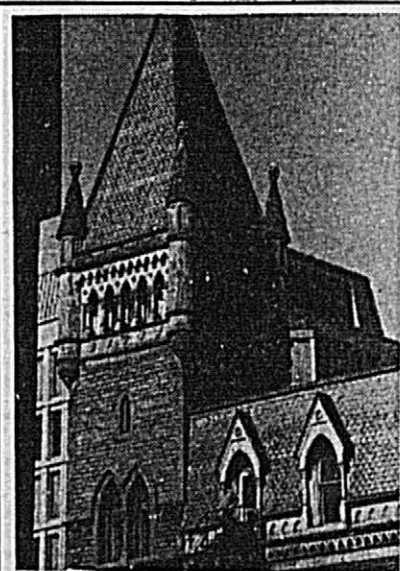

"He was a compassionate man you know, a great animal lover, for a fur trader, and he treated his coloured slaves firmly, but with a profound sense of responsibility."

After a long pause, the Principal continued: "I'm sure that our little doggies will find the area adjacent to his grave an ideal spot to discharge their natural bodily functions."

"And you know," Bell intoned solemnly, "I'm sure he wouldn't mind a bit. He was that kind of man. And the flowers of course, will love it."

The Dog Day Care Centre, in line with McGill's non-discriminatory hiring practices, will be strictly co-educational. Unspayed bitches, however, will be denied visiting privileges.

The bulk of the food will be provided by the Union Cafeteria, in an attempt to offset their alarming decline in patronage, and in accordance with the rather original theory as outlined by a cafeteria spokesman that "the quickest way to a student's heart, and wallet, is through his dog's stomach."

ADESTE FIDO: Morrice Hall, the site of the Administration's projected Dog Day Care Centre. Notice the open air exercise court handily doubling as a fire escape.

"In other words," the cafeteria spokesman elaborated triumphantly, "if the dogs like it, their owners should lap it up!"

On the advice of the RSPCA however, the dogs' diets will be supplemented with specially prepared "doggy lunches" from Bishop Mountain Hall.

Residence czar John Southin explained that as chairperson of Southern Food Enterprises Ltd., he had long been interested in the commercial production of dog food, and that the word at Southern Enterprises was "can do!"

"Southern's Chunky Doggy Grub — 'The best of BMH or 'the dog food that bites back' — will be ready and waiting for our clients when they arrive," Southin asserted exultantly.

In keeping with the nature of the institution, the didactic aspects of the dog care experience have not been neglected. Students' Society External Vice President Earle Taylor has volunteered the services of his two security guards to teach the male dogs the subtle art of crippling pedestrians.

Both guards, explained Taylor, hold white turtlenecks in SOCAKI (School of Canine and Killer Instruction), and are "itching under their collars to get out there and show the pushers their stuff." Students' Society President Paul Drager has volunteered to personally teach the female dogs "useful tricks such as begging."

"I would really like to teach them how to dance as well," added Drager, "but the only hind legs two step I know is a 1930's dancing bear routine, and even I'll admit that's a bit of a drag."

Drager denied reports that former Internal Vice-President Mark Bernier, special dog costume and all, would be hauled out of retirement to serve as Social Director for the centre. "Everything Mark knows," said Drager, "I taught him; and believe me that isn't much."

Union Building Manager Frank Costi was not too happy about the whole idea.

"Why is it," Costi demanded of the crowd gathered around him at a hastily convened mass democracy in the Union lobby, "Why is it, that whenever anybody around here gets some bright idea or other, it's always this Wop that gets left holding the shovel?"

The most determined opposition to the project however, has come from the LPCO (League of Pussy Cat Owners) headed by the formidable Miss Emma Wollop.

Miss Wollop described Bell's refusal to allow for the establishment of a Feline Day Care Centre as "disgustingly overt mouse-like behaviour."

"These are the sort of men," thundered Miss Wollop, referring to the administration, "that make lampshades out of babies fur coats out of kittens, and drive fresh young girls into the clutches of white slavers."

"I'd like to scratch their eyes out," she purred, "but that would only make things worse. They're blind enough as it is."

While exhorting Miss Wollop to "moderation and more moderation," Bell explained that the blame in this instance could be traced, no less, than to that most familiar of bogeymen — the energy crisis.

"There was simply no way," explained the Principal, "that we could get hold of all that kitty-litter. The Union Cafeteria did its best to help us out, but its substitute, a powdered gravy, just didn't fit the bill. Its consistency was great, but its taste was simply shitty."

"Besides," chuckled the Principal, "the mere suggestion that anybody in the administration is even remotely connected with the white slave trade is enough to make Stan (Vice-Principal Reverend Stanley B. Frost) run right out the front door screaming for the services of the nearest back alley exorcist."

Bell said that he was confident that the students would support him. "I've got a feeling," he concluded "that this is going to go over bigger with the average hard-working student of this institution — than even the Darwin Festival."

Most students, however, appeared to be curiously unaffected by the public announcement of the project; greeting the news with blank stares, and no small amount of incredulity.

One student commented that "this only confirms my long held belief that this university is going to the dogs."

Another said that she was not at all surprised at the choice of Morrice Hall for the planned centre. "I always thought that the place looked like a run down kennel," she sniffed.

In an exciting game last Thursday, McGill managed a 3-3 draw with the Macdonald Clansmen. With only 17 seconds remaining in the third period, Gordie Gow slipped the Redmen's tying goal behind the opposing netminder.

Pucksters tie Clansmen 3-3

by Dean Anton

Gordie Gow's goal with 17 seconds remaining in the third period lifted the McGill hockey Redmen into a 3-3 tie with the MacDonald Clansmen in a contest played Tuesday evening. The Redmen trailed throughout the entire game, but came on with a last ditch effort, scoring two goals in the final nine minutes.

The first period started at a fast and furious pace as McGill controlled the play for well over half the stanza. The Redmen had good rushes but each time were foiled in their attempt to score by either the superb goaltending of Clansmen netminder Dave Jones or their own inability to finish off their plays properly. The frame ended 0-0 and the frustration of the Redmen was taken out on various articles in the McGill dressing room.

The second period began much the same as the first had ended. Then at 3:54, disaster struck the Redmen when John Taussig, attempting to clear the puck behind his net, managed to pass it then send it up your spine.

To see the idea behind Roots, take a side-view look at the shoe. Instead of a heel to lift you up and tilt you forward, you'll find a one-piece base to plant you firmly in touch with Mother Earth. Roots, you see, work very much like roots. And if you take a side-view look at the human foot, you'll see why they work as well as they do. Your heel is the lowest part of your foot, so in Roots it sits in the lowest part of your shoe.

Suddenly you stand straighter as additional muscles in the back of your legs and the small of your back spring to life to help hold you up and move you around. Now consider that recess in your sole called the arch. If you spend a good deal of time on your feet, unsupported arches can sag and may fall out of shape altogether. (This is why in those pre-cruiser days a policeman was known as a flatfoot.) To help prevent your arches from falling, Roots are contoured to support them. There's a smaller recess between the balls of your feet which Roots will take care of as well.

Near the front, you'll notice the sole is curved like a rocker. In normal walking, your weight lands first on your heel, shifts along the outer side of your foot, then diagonally across to your big toe which springs you off on your next step. The rocker idea simply makes that transfer of weight a little easier, which makes each step a little less tiring.

All told, Roots bring a good, natural feeling to man's somewhat unnatural custom of treading hard floors and city sidewalks. Roots are designed and made in Canada; and at the heart of our production are two generations of cobblers (a father and three sons) who cling to the premise that good quality footwear must still be made largely by hand. The way we feel about making Roots has a lot to do with the way you'll feel wearing them.

MSEA ANNOUNCES:

- Oral Communications and Public Speaking Course
- Hypnotism and Self-Hypnosis Course
- Practical French Conversation Course I and II
- Auto-Mechanics Course

Registration for Public Speaking, Hypnotism, French Conversation, Auto-Mechanics and Bartending is being held today and tomorrow [Sign up fast!!!] in the Undergraduate Lounge of the Samuel Bronfman Bldg. From 6-9 p.m. Student enrollment is limited for all courses.

ORAL COMMUNICATIONS AND SPEECH PREPARATION COURSE

This Course quickly dispels the theory that "good speakers are born, not made". The Course is designed particularly for those interested in acquiring the skills which will make their everyday conversation and "public" speeches more persuasive and effective. The programme includes the preparation, construction and delivery of speeches; stance and gestures; voice and language; use of notes; pause and emphasis; introduction and thanking speakers; telephone approach; and, poise and confidence. Each session features, theory, practice and constructive criticism. All members of the group are afforded the opportunity to participate actively each week. Mr. George Kushnir, is a highly qualified instructor — he has taught this course for the last 15 years to businessmen, salesmen, and the public at the Montreal Board of Trade.

The fee of $50.00 per person covers all costs of the Course, including reference material.

HYPNOSIS AND SELF-HYPNOSIS INSTRUCTOR: MAURICE KERSHAW

The course will review the historical development of hypnosis from the ancient Greek Civilization, through the Middle Ages, to the schools of the 19th and 20th Centuries. Main emphasis however will be placed upon techniques of hypnosis as they are used today in medicine, psychology, dentistry, education, advertising and religion.

Students will learn practical techniques of subject preparation and conditioning, various methods of hypnotic induction, and will be introduced through workshops and demonstrations to the phenomenological aspects of hypnosis, which will include Positive & Negative Hallucinations, Post and Pre-Hypnotic Suggestions, Anesthesia and Analgesia, Age Regression and others.

The basics of Self-Hypnosis will also be taught as a technique for relaxation, organization of study and work habits and as a goal achieving mechanism.

The course will be conducted over an eight week period, beginning Monday, February 11th. Course fee — $25.00.

PRACTICAL FRENCH CONVERSATION I AND II

FRENCH I — CONVERSATION

This course is designed to enable the student to achieve a basic practical knowledge of the French language. Before each class a specific topic will be assigned and when possible a list of vocabulary essential to such a discussion is handed out. The instructor will then lead and guide each class with a goal of encouraging and aiding students to speak the French language.

FRENCH II — CONVERSATION ET STYLISTIQUE

Ce cours est adresse a ceux qui ont une certaine facilité d'expression en français. Le but du cours est d'aider ces derniers a s'exprimer encore mieux en français. Une façon d'y arriver est de les aider dans leurs compositions — corriger leurs erreurs grammaticales et stylistiques — leur expliquer d'avantage les caprices de la langue française.

Les étudiants s'inscrivant a ce cours devront aimer s'exprimer oralement et par écrit. Leçons souvent informelles — groupes restreints.

In the final analysis the courses depend upon the individual. The courses will provide the structure. Positive individual results can be achieved by working within that structure. In all each course will consist of 16 hours. Course fee is $18.00.

AUTO-MECHANICS COURSE

Have you ever been stranded on a highway? Have you ever heard a noise coming from your car and didn't know what it was? Have you ever had costly parts replaced on your car that didn't need replacing?

KNOW THE CAR YOU DRIVE!

Sign up NOW for MSEA's Informal Auto Mechanics Course—you'll learn all you'll ever need to know about: cold-starting, simple safety maintenance, to watch for warning sounds your car gives you that can save you money if detected early enough, and much, much more.

Course fee is $15.00.

Undefeated in 13 games

Women cagers trounce Trois-Rivieres 71-46

by Ellen Einterz

McGill's women cagers dribbled to a 71-46 victory over the UQTR Patriotes this weekend at Trois-Rivières. For the Patriotes, the trouncing was the first home-court defeat of the season; for the presently undefeated McGill squad, it was league win number thirteen.

If the Patriotes had played the whole game as they did the first half, McGill would have been able to go home at halftime and still win by ten points. With Sylvia Sweeney putting 18 points through the net during the first 20 minutes of play, McGill picked up a typical 32 points. On the other hand, with Quebec's high scorer, Bournival Claire, putting 3 points through, UQTR picked up a breathtaking 11.

The Second half matched the two teams more closely. Claire again topped Quebec's scoresheet, this time with 11 points, as her squad nearly played on par with McGill. Except for a single eight point scoring spree for each team, the shooting was evenly divided, and the scoring was fairly regular for both. In the half, McGill outdid UQTR by only four points, 39-35.

Having begun the game with a full court zone defence, McGill coach Jan Meyer opted for man-to-man relatively early. Quebec's defence, when they chose to have a defence, changed several times between zone and man-to-man.

In the "I-pushed-her-because-she-pushed-me" department, UQTR was pegged for a total of 29 fouls, McGill was called for 14.

Rough game

"It was a rough game," Meyer commented. "Several of the girls were too mad to play well." Meyer also criticized the referees for missing calls and permitting the rough play.

All but eight points of McGill's scoring came from the reliable Red trio of Sweeney (30 points), Yolande Deschamps (20 points), and Vic Row (13 points). Sweeney also grabbed 10 rebounds and caused six Quebec turnovers, Deschamps added five assists, while Row shot with better than 80 per cent accuracy and covered the boards for 16 rebounds. Coach Meyer also cited Marg Lanning for having played a strong game for the Squaws.

in front of the goal. The sliding puck caught Redmen goaler Jean Millette by surprise as it hit his stick and dribbled in behind him. Thus Mac was given a 1-0 lead courtesy of McGill.

Five minutes later, Bob McEwen tallied to increase Mac's lead to two as he fired a quick shot from the left side. On the play, McGill was guilty of ineptly clearing the puck.

At this point in the tilt, it seemed as if the evening was turning into a nightmare, for the Redmen found themselves losing to the worst team in the league, a team still looking for its first victory of the season.

O'Reilly connects

The big Red Machine cancelled one of the Mac goals late in the period when captain Bob O'Reilly blasted a drive from just outside the left face-off circle catching the upper left hand corner of the Mac cage. McGill continued to apply extreme pressure in an attempt to gain the equalizer before the period ended, but time ran out in the midst of the bombardment of the Mac goaler.

The third frame began with McGill continuing its barrage of shots but they suffered a short lapse and the Clansmen cashed in to again enjoy a two goal lead. The Redmen appeared to be down in the mouth at this point but the desire was there and, at 11:25, Jean Dionne took on an O'Reilly pass in the slot. The moustachioed centreman then let go a terrific blast that cleanly beat goaler Jones at his glove side.

The period rolled on and McGill had many excellent opportunities to tie the game but time after time they were unsuccessful. With 1:19 remaining, Redmen coach Herb Madill decided to lift goaler Millette in favour of an extra attacker. All the pressure fell on the Redmen as the thought of being beaten by MacDonald was becoming very real. It was even more difficult as the Mac fans, all 50 of them, were in a frenzy, their season long dream of winning a hockey game about to come true. But this was not to be.

The tying goal came when Dionne won a face-off deep in Mac territory, slipped the puck over to winger Gordie Gow, who in turn banged it home.

ICE CHIPS: The exciting game had plenty of action as McGill outshot Mac 39-31 and controlled the play for a good 45 minutes.... Bob O'Reilly proved what an all star he is by scoring a goal assisting on another even though he could hardly skate after sustaining an injury in the Sherbrooke game last week.... I would like to correct an error made in Monday's paper. The QUAA will have six play-off teams and not four, as I erroneously stated....
